During the years of game making, there have been a number of games. Many old games have disappeared since modern games came out.

Teachers at a primary school asked their students to write articles about games they knew and were shocked by the results. Eighty percent of the 50 children in one of the classes wrote about online games.

It is easy to see that traditional games like hide-and-seek and jump rope games are unfamiliar to many of today's school children, who like to play computer games - especially in the cities, with the rising popularity of TV, the Internet, video and online games.

An educationist said, "Traditional games used to be so popular, but over just a few years, students have forgotten them."

The games that many parents once played were generally outdoor activities, enjoyed during breaks or after school. They usually needed several partners and just a little space. Jump rope games, for example, have always been popular in countries around the world. A kind of jump game played with rubber bands connected together to make a long rope is played in some countries. Rubber band jumping was once very popular in primary schools. Girls loved playing this game. This game can help kids practice their jumping skills, develop coordination(协调性), and also meet lots of friends.

It is common these days to see primary school students spending their breaks in the classroom. They are busy with their studies.

"When we were young, we played many different outdoor games, but today's children don't know what to play or how to play," a 40-year-old mother said. "If these kids want something, they can get it, but they don't know what teamwork is."

Alarmed by the situation, educational officers have tried to make some programs to educate children about traditional games and bring them back to children's life.

Years later, Martha is a lawyer; however, she still has a problem with building relationships. Though she has strong abilities, not many of her workmates like her and she is still single. On the other hand, Brian is a happily married man and running his own business. He did not go to college but is happy and he is welcomed by all the people around him. Martha is intelligent(聪明的) but her lack(缺少) of Emotional Intelligence(EI) is a hindrance to her being a popular lawyer while Brian, with an average(平均的) IQ, is happy and successful in life because of his excellent EI skills.

EI, is a term that describes the ability to manage one's emotions and act properly to others.

Nowadays, companies not only focus on the hard skills (e.g. technical skills, work experience and education) but also personality features. Qualities like stress management and cooperation(合作) skills are important factors in success.

Ever since the researchers found out that those with high EI are more successful, the importance of EI in the workplace has been accepted. Since the workplace includes groups of people with different ideas, a higher EI is necessary to achieve goals. Good management of emotions improves the quality of our decisions. People with high EI are the best performers, have high levels of ability to create good relationships with others. Emotionally balanced people are self-confident, optimistic(乐观的) and good at managing disagreements and stress.

Unlike IQ which does not change after our teens, EI can continue to grow and develop as it is largely a learned skill.

Identify the realistic dreams. You may have a lot of dreams, so you have to pick out which dreams that you are actually willing towards and focus on. 62

Turn your dreams into goals. Dreams are something that is fun to think about, but if you want them to happen for you, you have to make a plan. 63 This may be monthly, weekly or daily goals. Even if you just do a little at a time, it will turn into something much bigger.

Keep away from time wasters. Sometimes the only thing standing between us and our dreams is time wasters like televisions. 64 Give yourself an hour a day of television or better not watch it at all. You will find that you don't miss it as much as you think.

65 It is very easy to make excuses, but it is much harder to explain things away to your friends and family. Make your plan known to them.

There is a musician, whose chemistry marks won't 69. If good marks are 70, that's great! But if he or she doesn't, please don't take away their 71 from them. Tell them it's OK, it's just 72 exam! With warm regards.
